In this film Dr Kim Woods discusses this sculpture is an example of African court art made around 450 years ago. This object is a brass relief sculpture from the historic kingdom of Benin in West Africa. It shows four attendants of the Oba or ruler of Benin, standing to either side of one of the doorways of the Royal Palace. It was made in the 16th or perhaps 17th-century to decorate one of the many columns supporting that same palace. Now in the British Museum, it was one of the artworks looted by the British in the punitive expedition against Benin in 1897 and brought back to England.

Before watching the film

1. What do you know about the materials bronze and brass?

2. What do you think this work depicts or represents? Describe what you see on the screen. Can you identify any recognisable architectural forms?

3. How are the figures presented in the work?
4. What function do you think this work might have served?

After watching the film

1. How do you think this work relates to the culture of the court where it was displayed?

2. Has the film helped you define some of the formal elements of the work? Consider scale, medium, and the treatment of the human figures.

3. Does it have a recognisable purpose or function? Does this relate to the time period in which it was made?

4. How has this film helped you think about how and where African art should be displayed?
5. What is its relevance for today?

Online Activity

You have a choice here, depending on how much time you have and what your interests are.

If you would like to follow up issues of displaying Benin art as ethnic artefacts or as art object, then watch the film and listen to the podcasts at OpenLearn:
